

User Story Group 8 – Hai, Mahady, Stuart

We imagine a worker in an office or a student in class as the basis of our hypothetical character. This person might be bored. He might be procrastinating. He might be 'desperately' looking for something to do instead of what he is supposed to be doing. The truth is, millions of people face this first-world problem on a daily basis. Their struggle is real. Fortunately, there is a solution.

Image Sharing Service.

Image sharing service appeals to our character because it provides a solution to the problem described above—boredom. He just wants to see funny memes, interesting photos, and read witty comments.

When he sees an image that has a lot of upvotes, he wishes that he was clever enough to post something that gets a lot of likes. Therefore, we give him the opportunity to post his own images which other people can then view, like, and comment on.

In summary, our service provides easy entertainment—looking at funny stuff. It is in some sense a competitive game, and in another sense a community. In the end, the user is briefly happy as his brain rewards him with a bit of dopamine.
